I have just a couple of comments for you to consider. The document is written from the perspective of developing Entergy’s cost. The SPP members will be very interested in the cost impact on them of Entergy becoming a member. It is not clear when Entergy becomes a member of SPP in the study or if they are assumed to be a full participant in the future market.

Personally, I do not think that the cost of Entergy upgrading its transmission system to SPP standards should be counted as a cost of becoming a SPP member.

Thanks

Ricky
